Explore Wat Arun, a Buddhist temple (wat) in Bangkok Yai district of Bangkok, Thailand, on the Thonburi west bank of the Chao Phraya River. The temple derives its name from the Hindu god Aruna,[1] often personified as the radiations of the rising sun. Wat Arun is among the best known of Thailand's landmarks. The first light of the morning reflects off the surface of the temple with pearly iridescence.[2] Although the temple had existed since at least the seventeenth century, its distinctive prang (spires) were built in the early nineteenth century during the reign of King Rama II. Leave Wat Arun at 12.30 hrs.

Lunch served on board.Tuk Tuk ride and explore Sunandha Palace

Take a tuk-tuk ride (10 min) to the Sunandha Palace.

The museum is a beautiful former Royal palace. It was used as a centre of arts training for Royal women in ancient Siam. More recently, it was developed into a teaching training facility, then became Rajabhat Institute and is now Suan Sunandha University. About a century ago, Suan Sunandha was regarded as the first royal culinary college for ladies of the court. Inspired by his experiences during his second visit to Europe, the king ordered the construction of a new royal residence with lush green gardens.

Explore Wat Chaloem Phra Kiat Worawihan

“Wat Chaloem Phra Kita Worawihan”, which literally is “Glorified Grand Temple”, is an ancient temple of more than 160 years old, situated in the Bang Si Mueang district in Nonthaburi. It was built in 1849 by King Nangklao (Rama III) in dedication to his mother (Queen Consort Sri Sulalai) and grandparents, who resided in the area. This temple has a unique characteristic that is unlike other temples in the country, as it is fortified like the walls of the Grand Palace. This once was the site of the old fort named “Pom Thaphim” before.

Take a short walk to the Bang Pa In Summer Palace. The original palace was built by King Prasat Thong on the island and was used as a country residence for the later kings of the Ayutthaya period.
